Leaving nobody behind in times of digitalisation. Experiences of older people from across Europe.

Digitalisation has reached all areas of life. Just think of shopping, cultural, sports or educational opportunities, medical advice, work or volunteer work. The COVID-19 pandemic has made it clearer than ever: if you have a good Internet connection, an Internet-capable device and, above all, the right know-how, you have endless possibilities for shaping your everyday life, maintaining communication as far as possible and obtaining important up-to-date information.

In Germany, nine million older "offliners" are excluded from these opportunities of digitalisation, especially very old people, women, people living alone, people with low income, low formal education or with a migration background. Creating fair access, teaching the necessary skills and ensuring safe use are therefore central for a society with equal chances of participation for all. Especially in crisis situations, such as the current pandemic, access to information and the maintenance of social contacts plays an essential role.

What happens if you do not have access to the Internet? Where can you get support to get closer to digital media? Do we have the right to information and participation? Does this also apply to the analogue, offline route? These and other questions will be dealt with in this workshop by the Secretariat for International Policy on Ageing of the German National Association of Senior Citizens' Organisations, which offers interested parties an insight into this topic from the perspective of diverse European countries. The aim is to exchange experiences of "digital senior citizen work" and to examine the situation of older people in times of digitalisation from a human rights perspective.
